

LUCKY STRIKE

This last month has seen the re-opening of the Criterion Theatre, following the lightning strike which caused such extensive damage to the building last April. The structural repairs are now complete, as is the redecoration of the bar and foyer which so nicely complements the current mood of optimistic excitement within the Criterion camp at the moment.

Club members relax in the refurbished bar; there is a good choice of drinks at reasonable prices.

The 'new-look' Criterion opened with "One for the Pot" on 3rd September, a rather dreary Whitehall farce redeemed by some high quality acting, for which the company has long been noted. The production was well attended, which is encouraging news for a theatre which has been in severe financial straits over recent years. They have always prided themselves on putting artistic integrity before box-office returns as a primary consideration in drawing up their yearly programme and, despite some varied and interesting programmes in recent seasons, have been a little disappointed with the response, especially from the local community. Some of the blame for this must be shouldered by themselves, as their publicity has been rather poor, born out by the fact that few people in Earlsdon and the surrounding areas seem to know where the theatre actually is. To combat this, five new recruits have been taken on, enlisted through the Manpower Services Commission, and they are currently hard at work improving publicity, constructing sets and generally redressing the problems caused by serious undermanning in the past.

For those not so theatrically minded, the committee point to the newly introduced activities such as the Free 'N' Easy, the recent Car Boot Sale and set-painting demonstrations. Even if these fail to impress, you'll find the bar prices very cheap and the atmosphere very friendly. You have to be a member to go along, but at 15p for one year's membership, and 60p for five years, you don't have to take out a second mortgage to join. The bar is open Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays, and all week when a play is being staged. Looking ahead, the next production is Tennessee Williams' contemporary classic "A Streetcar Named Desire", from 15th to 22nd October (including Sunday). Set in New Orleans in the 1940's, it follows the torment of a repressed southern widow at the hands of her brutal brother-in-law and her subsequent decline, via rape, into madness. It marks another interesting change for the theatre company, being the first Tennessee Williams play to be staged at the Criterion. On face value it may be seen as a rather 'safe' choice in the light of more adventurous projects in the past, but the cast and director recognise that it will be no easy task, especially as a precedent has already been set in the minds of the public of the standard to be expected, by Marlon Brando and Vivien Leigh in Elia Kazan's film of the same name.

The Criterion are hoping for continuing box-office success for their forthcoming productions.

Although at the time of writing the programme for next year was not officially available, we are reliably informed that the much acclaimed "Cabaret", which was originally scheduled for this year, will be carried forward to next season. Hopefully we can bring you the full programme in next month's issue.

In many ways, it seems that the thunderstorm on 22nd April did indeed inflict a 'lucky strike' on the theatre, galvanizing into action many plans for the Criterion which had been festering in the darkest recesses of the former Methodist Sunday School in Berkeley Road South for years. We wish them every success in their re-launch and hope you will give them the support they badly need for continuing success.

New Housing

The conversion of 39 Belvedere Road (corner of Earlsdon Avenue South) into five flats and the building of two bungalows in the back garden was completed earlier this year and the accommodation has been completely taken up. It is a shared ownership scheme for retired but active people worked out by Coventry Churches Housing Association in which elderly people sell large houses and take out leases with part ownership on more suitable accommodation. It is a pioneering example of a scheme introduced nationally by the government in April this year. We spoke recently to two of the residents, Mr. and Mrs. Deeming, who are "absolutely delighted" with the scheme and their new accommodation. They used to live in a large house in Coundon which they could no longer keep in repair, approached CCHA and moved briefly into the new Butts development. They applied for Belvedere Road and moved in during May, paying a quarter of the capital cost plus rental. Mrs. Deeming says: "It's superior accommodation and easy to keep clean". The bungalows are clearly purpose-built with central heating, waist-high electric sockets, extra wide doors (for wheelchairs) and a buzzer to summon help if necessary with pulls in four different rooms. Mr. and Mrs. Deeming are particularly pleased with the attractive grounds and summer house and say that there is a "nice friendly atmosphere".

CCHA are considering similar developments in Coundon and Binley Woods.

More Housing

A sheltered flatlet scheme on the S & O Car Sales site near the City Arms is to start early next year. We will give more details as they become available.

Blind Or Partially Sighted?

There are about 1,100 registered blind and partially sighted people in the City of Coventry. They range in age from less than a year old to 103, but about 70% of this number are over 75 years old. Blindness brings its own additional challenges and to cope with some of these, Coventry Social Services have a team of specialist staff who initially interview each newly registered blind person and assess his or her needs fully. They can offer mobility training, tuition in braille, Moon, typing, handicrafts, living skills, general household management and cooking. In addition group holidays taken with the accompaniment of specialist staff, social activities and outings are arranged during the year for blind and partially sighted people.

Those registered as blind are additionally entitled to certain statutory welfare benefits, including additional supplementary benefit or rent and rate rebates and increased personal allowance if liable for income tax. The three specialist social workers each cover a third of the City and are supported by an additional Mobility Officer. The North of the City is covered by a Specialist Social Worker based in the Allesley District Centre and in the Council House is a Specialist Social Worker for the blind covering the East of the City. The remaining part of the South of the City is covered by Mrs. Audrey Morris who is based at the Earlsdon District Office, 50/52 Albany Road. If you know of any blind or partially sighted people who you feel are not receiving their full entitlement to benefit or have social problems of other kinds, associated with their blindness, please do not hesitate to contact Mrs. Morris on Coventry 72283.

Dear Echo.

With reference to E.C.H.O. issue 49, I thought you may like some more information on the item of the last rear entrance bus to run to Earlsdon in 1979.

The bus in question was 333 CRW, a 1963 Daimler CVG6 with a Radford built chassis and Metro Cammell Body built at Elmdon.

Withdrawal of rear entrance vehicles was to be 24th August 1979 and as 333 was the one chosen for the event, some friends and I got in first, hiring it on 12th August for our own final run, taking in Nuneaton, Bedworth, Baginton etc.

On 24th August I was on 333 when it left Harnall Lane at 6.00 am for Wyken. We then headed for Earlsdon, picking up similar bus 327 as a duplicate. After a photo session at Beechwood Avenue we returned to the city, then on to Ernesford Grange. We did this return trip once more, then it was time to return to Harnall Lane.

When we got there the road was blocked by photographers, off duty drivers, office workers, all to see 333 return. An eye bolt and length of rope was fitted and everybody joined in to ceremoniously pull the bus in for the last time, thus ending rear entrance buses on the streets of Coventry and the entire WMPTE network. By a stroke of luck, the new transport museum was being built in Cook Street and some bright spark had the idea of giving 333 to it.

As I was working in the Harnall Lane paintshop at the time I had the honour of being involved in its restoration to the maroon and ivory colour scheme it now has and I still make regular trips to Cook Street to see it there.

I would be interested in meeting anyone who has any old Coventry Transport items and bus and train photos for sale or just to view. I can be contacted at Tyso & Co., 62 Earlsdon Street, telephone 72288.

Chris Williamson.

EARLSDON COMMUNITY PROJECT

The E.C.H.O. area may soon see a revival of community activity if plans by an independent group of residents get the go-ahead.

The group have set out to end the myth that Earlsdon is all affluence and have produced statistics and other evidence to show that the area has the most diverse range of social and community needs. At the same time, they recognise a "sector of caring, community-minded people with skills and expertise". It is the objective of the Project to evaluate the needs and add direction and bring financial resources into the area to complement existing activity.

In the longer term Earlsdon Community Project will consider a wide range of schemes to benefit and involve the elderly, ethnic minorities, single-parent families, the unemployed and mentally and physically handicapped people. Facilities under consideration include play areas, workshops, cycle ways and sports provision.

As a first step, after months of careful thought and planning, the group are applying to the M.S.C. to fund a Welfare Rights Scheme which would employ a supervisor and ten workers to contact people in their own homes initially and provide both an individual casework and an outreach advice service. The Scheme is intended to cover general Social Security problems, disability rights, employment and housing problems, debt counselling and some aspects of marriage and bereavement. In this and other schemes the intention is for Earlsdon Community Project to work with rather than for the community and it will encourage self-help groups and volunteers. If you are interested in actively supporting and working for the Project committee, please contact Chris Hanvey tel. 72281 or Dick Hodges tel. 73471.

Following our article in the June issue we now continue the story of the motorcycle side of the business in Osborne Road, Earlsdon (now Alpha Engineering). We are very grateful to Peter S. Clark for permission to use material from his account of his uncle's life - 'William Pilkington of Birmingham 1857-1928 - A Memoir'.

Between 1903 and 1909 Rex were highly successful with their range of motorcycles, the design, engine and frame all being made at their Osborne Road factory. A 1904 372 cc Rex in immaculate condition is on loan to Birmingham Museum of Science and Industry and is understood to be the second oldest motorcycle they have on display. Sadly Coventry's Museum of British Road Transport does not have a single Rex machine.

Rex were now producing machines with two-speed gears and in 1906 the company introduced their first twin-cylinder, a 5 hp model. By this time they were achieving fame in motorcycle racing. Rex machines were raced in all the Isle of Man T.T. races from 1907 to 1912; they then dropped out and did not reappear until 1922. In the twin-cylinder class of 1907 races, W.H. Heaton finished third at 30.5 mph and with a petrol consumption of 107 mpg. That was the only occasion on which a Rex finished in the first three in the pre-1914 T.T. races, but they were nearly always among the leading dozen and a very popular machine with many competitors. In 1908 alone, Rex motorcycles achieved over 70 successes in speed, long distance and hill-climbing trials.

Rex achieved a great deal of fame for their participation in the popular unofficial 'End-to-End' record from John o' Groats to Land's End. In 1904 the famous Harold Williamson on a Rex cut the great G.P. Mills' time (50 hours 46½ minutes) down to 48 hours 36 minutes from a southern start. He held the record for four years, then Tom Peck reclaimed it for Rex in 1909 with 40 hours 30 minutes. In September 1910 Arthur Moorhouse achieved 32 hours 13 minutes, an average speed of 30 mph on a Rex weighing 218 lb, including two headlamps and a heavy kit of spares!

W.O. Bentley, the well-known car designer and manufacturer mentions in his book 'The Cars in My Life' that he was a keen motorcyclist at this time and chose mainly Rex machines for endurance trials and, it is believed, speed trials at Brooklands. This is in itself no mean recommendation and says a great deal for the engineering standard of these machines.

Despite the success of these pure Rex models, both with trial riders and the general pleasure rider, William Pilkington decided to follow other motorcycle manufacturers and use an engine made by another company. In 1910 he arranged with J.A. Prestwich and Co. of London, to use their already famous single and twin-cylinder 3½ to 8 hp engines in the Rex frame. Thus from 1912 all motorcycles made by Rex in Earlsdon were designated Rex-J.A.P. models.

Some members of this early motorcycle club have Rex machines, photographed before 1904.

From their first year of production these models were an instant success, particularly the V-twin in the 6 to 8 hp range. These were especially suitable for the attachment of sidecars, with their higher power, and, to quote from the original brochure "their efficient, strong and reliable gear which is absolutely essential".

A very famous Rex machine was the Speed King. The 1912 edition was redesigned and several novel features were incorporated in the side valve engine. For example, one cunning device, which Rex were among the first to use, was a new method of lubricating the upper cylinder walls.

This Rex of 1912, with 3½ hp sidevalve engine, was equipped with hub gear and rearward mounted magneto.

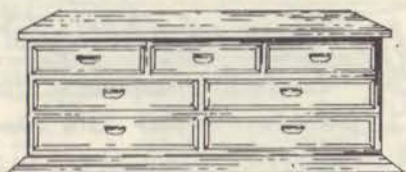

With the start of the War in 1914, motorcycling for pleasure or competition sharply declined. Although there were tenders put out for the supply of motorcycles to the Army, competition for these was fierce, with Rex-J.A.P. failing to win any. The most probable reason was insufficient capacity at the Earlsdon factory to supply large numbers of machines at short notice. During the War the company was sold by William Pilkington but it continued to manufacture motorcycles under the same name for some years.

Our next article, later this year, will look at the activities of Agnes Muriel Hind, the remarkable first lady motorcyclist from Allesley who raced for the Rex Company, and the recollections of Will Bromwich whose father worked at the Rex factory. Any further information about the Rex Company would be much appreciated.

HES Summer Fete

The Hearsall Environmental Society held their Summer Fete on 4th September, and despite the blustery weather there was a good attendance.

The Coventry Mimmers, with their version of St. George's rise to fame, were well received - and providing musical entertainment were the Dayspring Steel Band. There were many side stalls and the children were kept busy by the inflatable 'Wally the Whale'.

Other attractions included some ferrets brought along by Alan Court, of Henry Courts in Broomfield Road, who also sponsored the event.

ODE TO A BULL

We had a good chuckle over some of the entries to our 'Ode To A Bull' poetry competition generously sponsored by John Taylor (the Butcher's, Newcombe Road) who put up a £10 meat voucher for the best entry. On John's casting vote we picked the following poem by Mrs. Joan Beddows of Sovereign Road as the winner:

Here I stand, all brown and white,
Stuck in this window day and night.
I see the people passing by,
I blink my eyes, and breathe a sigh.
How I wish that I could be
On Hearsall Common, running free.
Then I think of where I stay,
In Taylor's window, on a tray.
Not for me, on someone's plate
With garnish as a juicy steak.
Some I know end in this qualm
With mushrooms in the City Arms.
So again, I blink and sigh,
I know that I must really try
To learn to love my nice abode,
Looking out on Newcombe Road.
To all you bulls, where'er you be,
Settle down and be like me.
Just be glad you're made of plaster,
To be fried would be disaster.
Why should we end up in a pan
To satisfy a hungry man?
So just stand still and think a while
Which is best, a field with stile,
Or in a window, on a tray,
Watching people as they pay.
They remember, with a frown,
When steak, a pound, was half-a-crown.
So I am glad that I'm unable
To grace a housewife's dinner table.

Wool Delivery

A new service to housebound customers is being launched in the Earlsdon area by JEANS, at 178 Albany Road. They are offering free delivery of wool, minimum order £3 and orders may be phoned in (tel: 74017) 9.00 am - 5.00 pm, Monday to Friday. Jeans already have an all year round club and a three months 'put by' service (select wool, collect as required), and hope their new idea will be popular with people who cannot get out to visit the shop.

Dorothy Bailey has owned the shop for four years and is helped by two friends, Nita and Janet. They reckon to give a helpful and friendly service, selling good quality baby and children's wear up to six years, baby wools, a wide variety of wools in both mixture yarns and pure wool, and a good selection of haberdashery including Cash's name tapes.

More changes are afoot in Earlsdon Street. A planning application has been made to create a wine bar on two floors in the premises currently occupied by Talbot's, the cycle and toy shop. Tea and coffee will be served during the day with wine being served lunchtimes and evenings. There are no plans for a kitchen at present as only cold food will be available. If all goes according to plan the wine bar could be open for Christmas.

Earlsdon is to be the location for a showroom which is reckoned to be unique in Europe. Nello's (the pizza people) are opening a showroom for catering equipment, including fryers and machinery for making pizzas, in the former Kettering Tyres premises in Providence Street. Mr. Nello told E.C.H.O. that he is hoping to open the showroom on 15th October.

Although rumours seem to be spreading that a supermarket chain is interested in the Astoria Cinema premises in Albany Road, the City Council's Planning Department have had no approaches from potential developers. We contacted the head office of Kwik-Save who were reported to be involved, and were informed that they were not aware of any such plans.
